WEDNESDAY MAY 2, 1883.

EX-SENATOR KELLOGG gives bail in $10,000 to answer the Star route indictment.

The promise is that electricity is to be the universal railroad motive power at a cheapness now incredible.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat promptly contributed $500 and four physicians to the relief of sufferers by the Mississippi cyclone.

SENATOR ANTHONY, the oldest of the United States Senators, whose present term completes his "30 years," is fatally ill with Bright's disease.

IT APPEARS that the sensational stories of the President's illness in Florida were almost groundless. It was, at least, so inconsiderable that his companions on the Tallapoosa knew nothing about it till next day. The President is accordingly indignant.

WE WOULD recommend the use of timepieces to the City, San Pedro and Military plaza railroad. It is impossible for a single track railroad, and hardly any other, to run cars by the sun, as we suppose this road, by the awkward time it makes, to be doing, especially on cloudy days.

AMONG the 10,000 adulterous poisons by which the lives of the people are being "lied away" is that of tea. Congress, at its last session, passed an act "to prevent the importation of adulterous and spurious teas," and Chicago is calling for the appointment of an inspector, which President Arthur fails to make. Hurry up, Mr. President, keep moving.

MARRIAGES seem to drag, and the births fail to keep up even with the casualties by wind and flood, explosions and suffocations in mines, to say nothing of the suicides or of the ordinary modes of departing this life, by which mourners are also crowded. While, on the other hand, there is much activity in the divorce market. Matrimonial societies are a failure, and new methods will have to be found for increasing the marrying stock or the country will go to the "demition pollywops," as Mantalini would say.

THE British army regulations are about to undergo a radical change. The scarlet coat, associated with all the glory of British arms for a century and a half, is to be put off, and the Confederate gray is to have its place. It is the ring of Southern valor in its name. Yet it is said the real sense of glory of the average British soldier is much dashed by the change. "I would rather be killed," said one, "in a red jacket than escape in a grey." But British troops have not, since the Crimean war, shown great readiness to be killed in any jacket. The Confederate veteran would prefer too, taking the British as a whole, that he would stick to his own color.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has put another spoke in the wheel of the nearest, most patriotic and admirable reforms, which seems to have been conceived and is being executed by himself, without a participant or political adviser under the sun. He has appointed, unsolicited and unsuspected by any one, and undreamed by the appointee himself, Mr. De Randolph Keim to be Chief Examiner of the Civil Service Commission. This executive policy seems fixed, is a great boon to the people and will convert the influential member to less haste in bringing his advice, and the miscellaneous influential crowd generally their solicitations, about appointments, to the President.

CONGRESSMAN RANDALL is diligently engaged in washing dirty political linen at the capital. Any resource he may fail to think of in his resolute purpose of rubbing all the spots out of Democratic politics, and placing himself in the Speaker's chair as the clean thing, will not readily occur to any one else. Mr. Randall, although not a lawyer, applies himself in every available case to making conquest of a Republican vote by high tariff services before the Secretary of the Treasury, doubtless purely voluntary. But his unsleeping watchfulness for work of this sort, and is so casual and very able advocacy, he pushes a still hunt for the coveted place which that fourth-proof politician is satisfied he has pre-emptory or prescriptive right to. Meantime, Senator Cox dispenses tariff gas in New York, Carlisle the bottled wisdom of a tariff veto mecum in the West, while the rival candidates in the various other sections adjust their relations to the Democratic party as tariff commentators and with the sole view of serving the country in that elevated grist mill, the speakership.

HAYTI.

The last advices from Port-au-Prince are to April 5. President Salomon had put in an appearance and then there were signs of war. Work and gasconade seemed both taking a hand, so that it is not going to be a war of pronouncements merely. The President has issued a proclamation and Bessaly, one of the insurgent leaders, a counter proclamation. It was announced that "all insurgents were executed," but in fact no insurgents had been captured, nor was there any sign that there were insurgents to capture beyond the invaders who were exiles brought to Miragoane by an American steamer which immediately left. The news is that the Minister of War was looking after the fortifications, that the merchants of Port-au-Prince had placed $200,000 at the service of the Government, that martial law had been declared "throughout the Republic," and that two war steamers were preparing to bombard Miragoane.

By the counter proclamation Salomon is deposed, but there seems no evidence of revolt, or that the hostile movement has taken any hold on the people. As the hostile force can not get away it must conquer order. By the next advice, if we do not learn the end, we shall at least be enabled to guess at it safely.

Daniel Boone.

Appropos of the Daniel Boone story recently printed a Kentucky correspondent writes: "In my boyhood 'Squire Boone, a brother of Daniel Boone, resided on the Indiana shore of the Ohio river, eight or ten miles below the mouth of Salt river and about 20 miles below where my father then lived, and where I have resided for the last 78 years. Now, on one occasion I recollect 'Squire Boone spent the night at my father's house, recounting their early Indian scrapes, and 'Squire Boone made the following statement: He said that in one of his brother Daniel's visits to Kentucky—I think the second—he and his companion camped for some time on Licking river, near what is now known as the Blue Lick springs, and one morning Daniel Boone went out hunting, but did not return, and after this the remainder of the party returned to North Carolina and reported to his family that Daniel had been killed by the Indians. Then, supposing that her husband was dead, Mrs. Boone married his brother. But it happened that the old pioneer was not killed, but captured by the savages and taken to their towns, from whence he finally made his escape, and on reaching his home found his wife had another husband and child, and this, I presume, is the correct version of the story. On his return home Mrs. Boone returned to her first husband, and lived with him until her death."

He Acknowledged the Soft Impachment. "You mustn't touch the top of the baby's head," said a mother to her little four-year old, "she has a soft spot there that is very tender."

The youngster gazed at it curiously for a moment, and then asked: "Do all babies have soft spots on their heads?" "Yes," replied the mother, with a sigh, "Did papa have a soft spot on the top of his head when he was a baby?" "Yes," replied the mother, with a sigh, "and he has got it yet."

And the old man who had overheard the conversation from an adjoining room, sang out: "Yes, indeed he has, my dear boy, or he would be a single man to-day."—[Rochester Post-Express.]

He—"May I call you Revenge?" She—"Why?" He—"Because revenge is so sweet." She—"Certainly you may, provided, however, you will let me call you Vengeance." He—"And why would you call me Vengeance?" She—"Because vengeance is mine." And she became his in a few months after.—[Buffalo News]

They tell a story of a Woodcock man who recently visited Boston to do a little business and hear a lecture by Mark Twain. By mistake he happened in on one of Rev. Joseph Cook's lectures. "Was it funny?" queried his family at night. "Well, yes," slowly replied the traveler, "it was funny, but it wasn't so darned funny."—[Exchange.]
